Power of Peace

2010-2011 Lions International Essay Contest Grand Prize Winner

By Amy Bosko, Age 12, Illinois, USA

There are three simple solutions to peace. The three solutions are, eliminating war, communication, and respecting people’s differences.

Many of our loved ones have died in wars. And regardless of where one is from, we can all agree that death is a tragedy that can be avoided. Soldiers are risking their lives and leaving families in fear wondering whether or not they will return home safely. There is a vast amount of people from various countries who have no food or shelter. Meanwhile, we are disputing over unnecessary topics such as race, money, and cultural differences, which leads to war! People should not be judged by who they are, what they have, or what they believe in. For instance, I am a 12 year old who has to cope with and accept my disability of being blind. I wouldn’t want people to judge me for only that. I am no different than anyone else.

Everyone needs to put forth an effort to communicate in order to avoid conflict. Without communication, it would be very challenging to come together as one, and promote world peace. It takes a team effort to make the world a peaceful place. It’s encouraging how the world works together in a synergistic union to make the world part of a more peaceful universe. If we don’t respect people’s differences, then we can’t have peace. You can’t just look at somebody and judge them because they are different. For example, if your best friend suddenly became terminally ill, offer them moral support and try to see things through their perspective. This might inspire you to treat them more equally. Most people who are different are more aware with their other senses. I am blind. However, I have senses that make me see a clear vision for world peace. I can hear the laughter of families floating across the borders of all countries. Laughter and communication skills are universal languages. I can taste the various foods from across the globe, blending seamlessly together, making their way to the less fortunate. I can smell the clean air from everywhere knowing that everyone needs air to breathe and would enjoy feasting on the various aromas weaved throughout the world. Most importantly, I can feel the sense and feel the power of peace when I meet a stranger and offer a peaceful greeting without being judgmental. People are different. People have much to offer, whether it be an act of kindness or discovering a cure for an illness. Joined together, different types of people are a powerful force and could inspire the world to function more successfully and peacefully. I may be blind, but I have the power to promote peacefulness on a daily basis.

All the things that I have mentioned should be practiced on a daily basis. If we all put our best foot forward, then the world would be a better place. So, as you can see, if we try to avoid wars, communicate more, and respect people’s differences, we would have a more peaceful environment.